In 2024 Adventure Consultants plan to lead several expeditions to Carstensz Pyramid—located in the heart of the Jayawijaya Mountain Range in the Indonesian territory of Irian Jaya, which is now called Western Papua.

This chain of limestone mountains spans the equatorial island of Papua from Irian Jaya or Western Papua (formerly Dutch New Guinea) in the west, through to Papua New Guinea in the east. At 4,884m/16,023ft, it is the highest peak in Australasia and one of the most remote of the 'Seven Summits'.

The mountain was first climbed in the 1960s by an expedition led by Heinrich Harrer, of the Eiger North Wall fame, along with New Zealand author and climber, Philip Temple.

Carstensz appears as a mysterious and relatively unvisited climbing objective, flanked with glaciers and rising like a shark's fin out of the midst of the jungle.

This expedition has the attributes of a classic rock climb combined with a rare cultural experience. It is a journey of discovery and achievement, and most likely your best chance of experiencing this part of the world and standing on the summit of this exotic peak.

THE ROUTE

We will climb the mountain via the North Face, in a long day from the base of the peak to the summit and back. The guides will attach fixed rope to the most difficult sections of the route to enable quick access to the summit ridge and a rapid descent afterwards.

Some of the terrain can be climbed without ropes and is little more than scrambling, but other sections will require the ropes fixed over technical rock slabs. In addition, some parts of the razorback summit ridge, while technically straightforward, are very exposed and there is even a three-wire bridge to negotiate.

The mountain is coarse limestone, which provides excellent friction for climbing boots but can be particularly rough on ungloved hands. The route is suitable for climbers of modest experience as long as they have some recent fixed rope experience or are prepared to undertake some training prior to departure.

ACCESS TO THE MOUNTAIN

The approach to the mountain involves flying from Denpasar (Bali) to the town of Timika (or if logistics dictate, via Nabire) in Western Papua. We fly by helicopter directly to our Base Camp at 4,200m/13,000ft. We rest and acclimatise over 3 days/ nights before attempting the climb to the summit of this elusive peak. The Base Camp is at a very high elevation to fly to, but our options are otherwise limited for access. Helicopter access will enable us to avoid many days of difficult jungle trekking and arrive fresh and ready for the climb.

Following the climb, we helicopter back out directly from Base Camp back to Timika and onwards to Bali, culminating in a short 11-day fly in/fly out adventure.

Please be aware that many companies offer expeditions and will promise to 'smuggle' you through the Freeport Mine, or get a permit to travel through the mine. These methods are illegal at best or dangerous, and sometimes a combination of both. We encourage you to consider carefully your selected operator as many people have been detained by the mine for 10 or 12 days only then to have to walk out for another four days.

TEAM SIZE

The team will have a minimum size of 3 members and 1 Adventure Consultants guide (plus local guides), and a maximum size of 7 members and 2 mountain guides (plus local guides).
